

Journal of Human Rights

Business & Human Rights Special Issue

The global community increasingly demands more action and accountability from multinational corporations on a broad spectrum of human rights issues ranging from worker rights in the supply chain to abuses by government and private security forces in the extractive industries. In this special issue, leading academics from law and business faculties are joined by practitioners who have worked on addressing these challenges in the field. For those who want to understand why business is now at the core of many human rights struggles and where related academic and policy debates are heading, this special issue is must reading.

Business & Human Rights Special Issue
Vol. 14, Issue 2, April-June 2015
Guest Editor: Michael Santoro

Business and Human Rights in Historical Perspective
Michael Santoro

Normativity, Ethics, and the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: A Critical Assessment
Florian Wettstein

Conflict Minerals, Black Markets and Transparency: the Legislative Background on 1502 and its Historical Lessons
Toby Whitney

Using Securities Disclosures to Advance Human Rights: A Consideration of Dodd-Frank Section 1502
Celia Taylor

Should Business Have Human Rights Obligations?
Nien-he Hsieh

From Corporate Social Responsibility to Business and Human Rights: Putting Law into the Equation
Anita Ramasastry

Indigenous Peoples' Right to Prior Consultation: Transforming Human Rights from the Grassroots in Guatemala
Jennifer Costanza

A Review of Responsibility for Human Rights: Transnational Corporations in Imperfect States, by David Karp
Anthony Ewing

Editor: Shareen Hertel, University of Connecticut

Journal of Human Rights publishes 4 issues per year
Print ISSN: 1475-4835 Online ISSN: 1475-4843

Learn more at <http://humanrights.uconn.edu/>